Distinctive Features of the Course:

Politics and History at Wolverhampton offers a research-engaged and skills-led way to study the historical development of the social and political world we must navigate today as individuals and communities.

- You will learn about the histories of and connections between different parts of the world, while having the choice to focus on your own historical and political interests.
- On the course you will consider how different individuals and groups relate to the world of politics, and how these differences impact on the construction of policy.
- Community-based learning options encourage advocacy and placements in not-for-profit agencies and organisations, embedding learning while encouraging civic responsibility.
- You will be taught by leading scholars who are engaged in research in the areas they teach, while you will be encouraged to develop your own intellectual interests and trained in the necessary skills to undertake historical and political research for yourself.
- The skills focus of the course will give you a grounding in the study skills required for academic achievement and the transferrable skills that will be useful for graduate employment.

Educational Aims of the Course:

Studying Politics and History at the University of Wolverhampton means learning to critically investigate the political world we inhabit and how it came to be. The course adopts a global perspective, examining the histories of and connections between different parts of the world, including Britain, Europe, the Americas and South Asia. With taught topics including class, gender, migration, youth culture, activism and empire, you will learn how to apply political theory in order to make a difference.

The digital learning environment will equip you with information, materials and learning activities to support you in regular face-to-face seminars and workshops. In classes and assessed work, you will develop your skills of information gathering, critical thinking, analysis, interpretation and communication, which are essential for academic study and transferrable to graduate work in a wide range of fields.

This course actively encourages you to develop your own historical and political interests, while providing a learning experience conforming to the national benchmarking standards. You will gain breadth and depth of historical knowledge at the same time as developing the skills necessary to undertake your own research. In the process, the course aims to prepare you to apply your knowledge and skills to further study, a variety of graduate employment opportunities, and to be a critical and engaged global citizen.

Teaching, Learning and Assessment:

Learning Activities

Study on the Politics and History course takes place through a mix of learning activities designed to meet the needs of a diverse body of students, in line with the Wolverhampton Framework for Course Design and the Wolverhampton Inclusive Framework. This includes lectures, seminar discussions, group work, hands-on workshops and independent study as well as community-based learning through advocacy activities, volunteering and work placements. This range of learning activities supports the development of interpersonal skills as well as having educational value.

The use of the virtual learning environment is a significant feature of all modules, with information and materials regularly being provided and some activities taking place online, while face-to-face learning is at the heart of the student experience. This mix of online and face-to-face learning activities allows a significant degree of flexibility for students to study how and when suits them best, supporting them to take ownership of their own learning at the same time as providing regular practice in developing digital literacy skills.

At all stages, students are guided and supported to develop their study skills, to engage with debates amongst historians and political scientists, and to develop their own ideas through working with historical sources and on important contemporary political issues. At Level 4, coaching in core academic skills is embedded within a set of modules designed to guide students to see the links between the personal (oral histories) and the local (advocacy) with the national (British Politics) and the global (International Relations, Changing Times) and tracing global connections (Europe and the Americas, Britain and the World). This lays the groundwork for the rest of the course and beyond that for equipping our graduates to be engaged and aware as global citizens.

This continues at Level 5, where option modules allow students to choose between different areas of research-informed study aligned with clusters of staff expertise, in line with the Wolverhampton Framework for Course Design. The skills focus of Level 5 leads students to engage critically with the scholarship on topics ranging from class and community engagement to international politics, migration and global activism.

The focus at Level 6 shifts to applying the knowledge and understanding developed on the course and undertaking their own research, preparation for which begins in the Level 5 Research in Action core module. In addition to a choice of research-engaged specialist topic modules at Level 6, community-based learning options and the final-year independent study both nurture students' intellectual curiosity, encouraging them to develop their initiative and take ownership of their learning while offering the opportunity to apply their knowledge and skills in creative and enterprising ways.

Assessment

Throughout the course, learning activities and assessments are used to develop students' skills. This includes written and verbal communication skills, team and independent working, digital literacy, critical thinking and analytical abilities, appreciation of otherness and alternative perspectives, the ability to find and work with varied and often fragmentary evidence. On the course, students will also learn how to draw upon these skills to produce and present coherent and effective arguments, and to develop policy interventions aimed at achieving political change.

Assessment methods may include, but are not limited to, essays, exams, presentations, portfolios, book reviews, source commentaries, case studies, reports, reflective journals, blogs and digital media creation. Formative tasks and 'unpacking' sessions are regularly used to support students in approaching this range of assessment methods with confidence. In the feedback on them, which is provided via the VLE with follow-up tutorials available, there is a strong focus on skills development to support student progression and equip students to reach their full potential as learners.

With this range of assessment types, the course is both academically robust and seeks to develop skills in digital literacy, critical thinking and analysis, written and verbal communication, that will serve graduates well in a wide range of future careers.

Assessment Methods:

At the University of Wolverhampton, a variety of modes of assessment will be used to support and test your learning and progress and to help you develop capabilities that are valued beyond your University studies and into your working life. Your course may include a variety of assessment activities:

Written examinations (including online examinations, open and closed book examinations and quizzes)
Coursework (for example, essays, reports, portfolios, project proposals and briefs, CVs, poster presentation)
Practical (for example, oral and video presentations, laboratory work, performances, practical skills assessment)

In the final year of your undergraduate degree, and at the end of your postgraduate degree, you are likely to be expected to write an extended piece of work or research, such as a dissertation or a practice-based piece of research.

Student Support:

General University support

University Learning Centres are the key source of academic information for students. Learning Centres provide physical library resources (books, journal, DVDs etc.) and offer a range of study areas to allow students to study in the environment that suit them best: Social areas, quiet and silent areas. Learning Centres also provide access to wide range of online information sources, including eBooks, e-Journals and subject databases. Learning Centres also provide students with academic skills support via the Skills for Learning programme. Students on campus can attend workshops or ask for one-to-one help on a range of skills such as academic writing and referencing. Students can access a range of online skills material at:

www.wlv.ac.uk/lib/skills.

The University also has a host of other services to support you, please take a look at the Student Support website: www.wlv.ac.uk/current-students/student-support/. If you have any questions, need help or advice then ASK@WLV is there for you: www.wlv.ac.uk/current-students/askwlv/.

Course Specific Support

Students are allocated an academic coach in their first year to support their transition to higher education and thereafter will be allocated a personal tutor to provide academic and pastoral support. This is in addition to the support for developing academic and transferrable skills embedded across the course to aid progression, in line with the Wolverhampton Framework for Course Design and the Wolverhampton Inclusive Framework. This is a central feature of formative and summative assessments and the feedback provided on them via the virtual learning environment and follow-up tutorials, with a focus on particular skills at each level.

All of this is in addition to the school's extensive ongoing support services available to all students throughout their studies. Throughout their degree programme all students also have the opportunity to book sessions with academic counsellors at any time during the year to discuss individual assessments or wider study skills development.

Employability in the Curriculum:

Employability considerations are embedded throughout the course, which is mapped to the University Graduate Attributes Framework. Politics and History graduates have not only received a training in academic skills useful for further study but also transferable skills of digital literacy, critical thinking, information gathering, assessing and interpreting data from varied and often fragmentary sources, grappling with multiple perspectives, and developing coherent arguments and communicating clearly on complex issues, as well as the application of knowledge and theory as policy interventions. These are abilities high valued in a wide range of fields, including journalism, teaching, local government, and the community and not-for-profit sectors.

Strong links between the university and local partners underpin the community-based learning volunteering and placement options on the course, which offer the opportunity for students to be supported while they work with local organisations to apply the skills they have developed in their studies beyond the university setting.

The degree is structured to enable students to exercise agency over their module choices and independent learning opportunities, thus developing their own competencies and employability. As a degree, Politics and History is designed to encourage students to develop their critical and analytical skills. This focus and the accompanying skills that it develops provide students with the opportunity to increase their awareness of ethical responsibilities and the debates surrounding global citizenship.
